DECLARATION OF FRANK BAUMGARTNER

DECLARATION OF FRANK BAUMGARTNER

I, Frank Baumgartner, hereby make this declaration from my personal knowledge and, if called to testify to these facts, could and would do so competently:

Background

1. I am the Richard J. Richardson Distinguished Professor of Political Science at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (UNC-CH). I joined the Political Science Department at UNC-CH in 2009 as the first holder of the Richardson professorship.

2. Prior to coming to UNC-CH, I held academic positions at The University of Iowa (1986-87), Texas A&M University (1987-98), and Pennsylvania State University (1998-2009). I have also held numerous visiting appointments, including at universities in Norway, Scotland, France, Italy and Spain.

3. I am originally from Detroit. I received my Bachelor of Arts in Political Science and French, my Master of Arts in Political Science, and my Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

4. My research focuses on public policy, agenda-setting, and interest groups in American and comparative politics. My work has appeared in such journals as the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, the Journal of Politics, Comparative Politics, the Journal of European Public Policy, and Legislative Studies Quarterly.

5. Along with Bryan D. Jones, I created the Policy Agendas Project, which is now the Comparative Agendas Project. The project collects and organizes data from archived sources to track policy outcomes across countries. Dr. Jones and I have written three books together, all published by the University of Chicago Press: The Politics of Information (2015); The Politics of Attention: How Government Prioritizes Problems (2005); and Agendas and Instability in American Politics (1993; second edition 2009).

6. I have written several other books in my field with various collaborators, including: Basic Interests, on the Importance of Interest Groups in American Politics and Political Science (Princeton University Press, 1998, with Beth Leech); Conflict and Rhetoric in French Policymaking (Pittsburgh, 1989); The Decline of the Death Penalty and the Discovery of Innocence (Cambridge University Press, 2008, with Suzanna De Boef and Amber E. Boydstun); Lobbying and Policy Change: Who Wins, Who Loses, and Why (U. Chicago Press, 2009, with Jeffrey M. Berry, Marie Hojnacki, David C. Kimball, and Beth L. Leech); and Agenda Dynamics in Spain (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015, with Laura Chaqués Bonafont and Anna M. Palau).

7. My collaborators and I have received awards and recognitions for our work. In 2001, the American Political Sciences Association (APSA) Organized Section on Public Policy awarded us the Aaron Wildavsky Award for Agendas and Instability in American Politics and called it “a work of lasting impact on the field of public policy.” In 2008, The Decline of the Death Penalty and the Discovery of Innocence was awarded the Gladys M. Kammerer Award by the APSA for the best book on U.S. national policy. In 2010, Lobbying and Policy Change: Who Wins, Who Loses, and Why won the Leon D. Epstein Outstanding Book Award from the APSA Section on Political Organizations and Parties. In 2016, the National Academy of Public Administration awarded us the Louis Brownlow Award, denoting The Politics of Information as the best book in the field in 2015. In 2017, The Politics of Information will receive the award for the best book published in English in 2015 on the topic of public policy from the International Public Policy Association.

8. In October of 2017, I will be inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

9. My current research interests include the continued extension of the Policy Agendas Project. Comparative policy agendas projects are underway in Australia, Belgium, Canada, Croatia, Denmark, the European Union, France, Greece, Hungary, Hong Kong, Israel, Italy, Japan, Malta, the Netherlands, Portugal, Scotland, South Korea, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and for the U.S. states of Pennsylvania and Florida.

10. My current research agenda also includes studies of race, with particular focus on the death penalty and traffic stops. With UNC-CH colleagues Seth Kotch (American Studies) and Isaac Unah (Political Science), I am writing a book tentatively entitled A Deadly Symbol: Race and Capital Punishment in North Carolina, focusing on the decline of the death penalty in the state and its potent racial symbolism throughout history.

11. In addition, with a number of current and former UNC-CH undergraduate students, I recently finished a book entitled Deadly Justice: A Statistical Portrait of the Death Penalty which brings together much of my recent work on race, innocence, delays, reversals, and the geographically-arbitrary nature of the death penalty in the modern (post-1976) era. The book has three audiences: students learning about the death penalty, anyone concerned about the facts of how the death penalty actually operates (as opposed to how we might wish it operated), and the Justices of the U.S. Supreme Court. The book seeks to answer some of the most pertinent empirical questions relevant to the Court's review. This book will be published by Oxford University Press in 2017.

12. In 2011, I began a research project with UNC-CH graduate student Derek Epp focused on the analysis of all traffic stops in North Carolina, based on official data collected since 2000 that has never been subjected to systematic analysis. This work has led to considerable news coverage across the state and is engaging policymakers to address the problem of racial profiling. We are also revising chapters of a book tentatively entitled Eroding Trust, Policing Anger: How Racial Disparities in Traffic Stops Threaten Democratic Values, which is under advanced contract with Cambridge University Press. The book takes a comprehensive look at more than 20 million traffic stops in North Carolina and focuses on racial profiling and the high costs, but low dividends, of diverting the traffic safety function of traffic patrols to the war on drugs.

13. In the last four years, I have taught the following courses at UNC-CH:

- Political Science / English / American Studies 248, Spring 2017, Intersectionality: Race, Gender, Sexuality and Social Justice
- Political Science 718, Spring 2017, Graduate Seminar on Agenda-Setting
- Political Science 421, Fall 2016, Framing Public Policies
- Political Science 203, Spring 2016, Race, Innocence, and the Decline of the Death Penalty
- Political Science 490, Fall 2015, Advanced Seminar: The Death Penalty
- Political Science 421, Spring 2015, Framing Public Policies
- Political Science 727, Spring 2015, Graduate Seminar on Framing
- Political Science 203, Fall 2014, Race, Innocence, and the Decline of the Death Penalty
- Political Science 718, Spring 2014, Graduate Seminar on Agenda-Setting
- Political Science 421, Fall 2013, Framing Public Policies

14. I serve on the editorial boards of the Journal of Public Policy, Public Administration, Policy Studies Journal, Political Research Quarterly, the Journal of European Public Policy, Gouvernement et Action Publique, and other journals.

15. I have been active in the American Political Sciences Association (APSA). In 2011, the APSA Section on Political Organizations and Parties awarded me the Samuel J. Eldersveld Award for Career Achievement.

16. I am active in University service activities, serving as an elected member of the University-wide Faculty Council, as the Diversity officer for the Department of Political Science, and in various other service capacities.

17. I serve on the Board of Directors of Healing Justice, an organization my wife created in 2015 to help address the extensive human damage caused by wrongful convictions. Healing Justice hopes to promote restorative justice principles in wrongful conviction cases, assist with the provision of services to individuals harmed by wrongful convictions, and create opportunities to unify the diverse voices of those harmed in order to prevent future wrongful convictions.

Educational Benefits of Diversity

19. Diversity provides substantial and real educational benefits and is critical to our students' learning at UNC-CH. I have personally observed these benefits over my many years of teaching.

20. For example, classroom discussion and learning in my courses is richer and deeper when we have a diverse group of students in the classroom, with diversity defined broadly. Diversity in the classroom also helps our students develop awareness and an understanding of different perspectives and experiences in a more meaningful way. Learning about race and diversity-related issues with diverse classmates is particularly important in promoting cross-cultural understanding and helping break down stereotypes and prejudices. It would be extremely difficult, and ineffective, to teach about diversity issues without diversity among students.

21. Because I believe that my students learn the most from each other, my courses are structured to provide meaningful interaction between students.

22. In Spring 2017, I co-taught a diversity super-course entitled American Studies/English/Political Science 248: Intersectionality: Race, Gender, Sexuality and Social Justice. I co-taught the course along with Professors Jennifer Ho (English and Comparative Literature) and Sharon P. Holland (American Studies). Baumgartner Declaration Exhibit 3 is a true and correct copy of the syllabus for the course.

23. The course description, as set forth in our syllabus, states as follows:

According to the US Census Bureau, in the year 2020 “more than half of the nation's children are expected to be part of a minority race or ethnic group. All Americans under the age of 18 are now at the front of a trend that will see the overall population follow suit some 20 years later” (NPR’s Hansi Lo Wang). In essence, we are in a time of a dynamic racial shift, and yet our country seems to be divided or confused about what “race” is, how to talk about it, and how it might intersect with other identity formations such as gender, class, or sexuality. The first goal of this super-course is to give students real tools for how to address multiple modes of difference.

The second arc of this course is its focus on the southern hemisphere – a region that is in the midst of a dramatic demographic transformation that is likely to accelerate as we approach the mid-century mark. By understanding region and race, for example, students will not only enhance their understandings of the south, but also contribute a substantial body of scholarship to the state archives through group and individual projects (see below). We plan to be at the forefront of the discussion on the future of the U.S. south and its connections with sister states above and below the equator.

In order to do this work, this interdisciplinary course will cover such topics as racial formation, ethnic identities, racial profiling, environmental justice, gender violence and bias, histories of institutions (education/prison) and narratives of belonging and citizenship.

By the year 2044, “no one racial or ethnic group will dominate the U.S. in terms of size,” (U.S. Census Bureau). We want to be ready for that moment and so do you.

24. In the super-course, we cover various subjects related to diversity, including intersectionality, citizenship, American dreams, race and punishment, and campus culture.

25. In addition to lectures, we employ “Interaction Groups” which constitute 40 percent of a student’s grade. For these groups, students organize into groups of 3-4 in their recitation sections to work on a course-long project that will also be tied to the final exam and will serve as a class-produced public Word Press website. At the end of this class, each student will have contributed content to creating a web page that engages with the theme of this course. Teaching Assistants (TAs) work with students in recitation during the early stages, but students are expected to meet outside of class to work on the content for their Word Press contribution.

26. As stated on our syllabus, “The goal of this portion of the course is to have students engage one another on intersectional issues and for them to demonstrate their skill at redacting materials and formulating questions about them. We hope that the website will produce a conversation at UNC about diversity and inclusion that is not only visible to members of the University community but also able to reach a broader audience of scholars, teachers and students concerned about intersectional issues in the state and elsewhere.”

27. The diversity of students in the diversity super-course is essential to its effectiveness and success.

28. I also teach about the death penalty. In Spring 2016, for instance, I taught POLI 203: Race, Innocence, and the End of the Death Penalty. This course typically has around 250 students in the lecture class, and each student is also assigned to a 20-person discussion section that meets weekly with a TA. Quality participation in discussion was expected, and a student's participation in discussions was graded. I also arranged for eight evening speakers, and for each event, I organized a dinner with four or five undergraduates, a TA, and the speaker – creating terrific opportunities for discussion. Baumgartner Declaration Exhibit 4 is a true and correct copy of my course syllabus from Spring 2016 in POLI 203.

29. Some of my classes do not attract as much diversity. For instance, if I teach a class about lobbying, I do not necessarily get a big minority presence. If I teach about the death penalty, I get a higher percentage. I notice a significant difference in the conversations – with conversations enhanced by diversity of all kinds.

30. Conversations in my class discussion sections are enhanced by whatever diversity may be there, whether students are from underrepresented minorities or impoverished backgrounds. For example, a topic we have discussed is police behavior toward black, white, and Hispanic drivers. Minority students understand this in a way that majority students do not, and some have personal experiences of having been stopped by police. When these students share their personal experiences with their classmates, this provides a powerful and impactful learning moment.

31. The Political Science Department has a program where students take a professor to lunch. Students email the department and set up lunch with a professor, and the department pays. In my death penalty course, I immediately had two students who emailed and wanted to have lunch with me. One was a Hispanic female and one was an African-American female, and they were in the same discussion section. Both had family members in prison. They were fascinated by the class, and they believed they were the only ones in the class with family members in prison. We talk a lot in class about the racial dynamics of who is on death row, what crimes they committed, and who the victims of their crimes were. It is extremely helpful to hear about people's own family experiences and hear from people who are touched personally by the subject matter. It creates interesting, difficult, and fulfilling conversations and enhances learning, bringing the points home to those students who are able to see that another student whom they know and respect has had such experiences. Bryan Stevenson refers to this concept as "proximity" in his book, Just Mercy. It can also be an important element of learning.

32. Diversity among the student body is also needed to encourage students' full participation at UNC-CH. I have observed that if there are only one (or two) minority students in class, they may be inclined to stay quiet. If there are five, they are more likely to bring out issues and perspectives that generate real learning. It benefits those whose voice might not be heard if they feel intimidated by small numbers, but it also benefits the other students in the class if they can hear these perspectives, otherwise silenced.

Faculty Diversity at UNC-CH

33. I serve as the Diversity Liaison for the College of Arts and Sciences. In that capacity, I am on a task force that presented a diversity survey to the College of Arts and Sciences, which expressed concern about the lack faculty diversity. Recruiting underrepresented minority faculty members continues to be a challenge. Until we have a larger pipeline of diverse candidates in graduate school from top undergraduate programs, that will continue to be a challenge.

34. I have observed that a diverse student body in the Ph.D. program makes the variety of dissertation topics expand. When I have African-American or Hispanic graduate students, they are interested in writing their dissertations on race-associated disparities and explaining puzzles related to race and ethnicity. Female graduate students are interested in gender disparities. This provides a richness to the whole profession, as these students are the pipeline of future faculty members.

35. It was not mainstream to study race and politics in the 1980s, nor was it mainstream to study gender and politics. Few of the white male individuals who constituted the vast majority of the professorate were particularly interested in gender and politics, so that area of research was under-studied until women entered the profession. Now, race and ethnicity are major sections of political science, and there is significant research on voting and electability. It enhances the profession to have a more diverse professorate as well as a more diverse student body. We certainly have a stronger profession of political science with a richer set of scholars studying issues such as gender and race, which I think we can all agree are central to the practice and realities of political life. Until there was greater diversity in the profession, these were under-studied areas of political science. In retrospect, it would seem surprising that such essential issues would be peripheral to a profession centered on political struggles. But to a professional group which was largely white, middle class, and male, it was as natural as breathing the air, something we collectively did without thinking. Diversity enhances the profession by avoiding such glaring blind spots. It enhances the classroom and more general learning experience of the University in a similar manner.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States that the foregoing is true and correct.

Fields of Teaching and Research Interest

Public policy, punctuated equilibrium theory, agenda-setting, framing, interest groups, lobbying, social movements, budgeting, capital punishment, racial disparities in police traffic stops, American politics, comparative politics.

CURRENT RESEARCH

Comparative Agendas Project (see <http://www.comparativeagendas.net>). Bryan Jones and I started the US Policy Agendas Project in 1994, which makes publicly available data on the activities of the US government since 1947. It has now expanded internationally to become the Comparative Agendas Project (CAP), with affiliated projects in over a dozen countries.

Capital Punishment Research (see <http://www.unc.edu/~fbaum/Innocence/Innocence.htm> and <http://www.unc.edu/~fbaum/books/DeadlyJustice/index.html>) Following on the research I conducted for a book published in 2008, I continue to be involved in analyses of the death penalty in the US and in North Carolina.

Traffic Stops (see <http://www.unc.edu/~fbaum/traffic.htm>). After being asked to calculate the rate at which drivers of different races and ethnicities are searched or arrested following a police traffic stop, I have become involved in a comprehensive analysis of over 20 million traffic stops in North Carolina since 2000. Several papers and a book are in preparation exploring different elements of the “driving while Black” phenomenon.

Research Under Review or Near Completion:

- Being revised for submission

Eroding Trust, Policing Anger: How Racial Disparities in Traffic Stops Threaten Democratic Values. Under contract, Cambridge University Press; deadline for submission: May 2017. (Frank R. Baumgartner, Derek A. Epp and Kelsey Shoub)

A Deadly Symbol: Race and Capital Punishment in North Carolina. Under contract, University of North Carolina Press; target for submission: 2018. (Frank R. Baumgartner, Seth Kotch, and Isaac Unah)

Comparative Policy Agendas: Theory, Tools, Data. Edited book in progress based on the comparative agendas project and its new web site integrating data analysis and distribution for over a dozen western countries. Target for submission to Oxford University Press, Summer 2017. (Frank R. Baumgartner, Christian Breunig, and Emiliano Grossman, eds.)

- Under review

The Mayhem of Wrongful Liberty: Documenting the Crimes of True Perpetrators in Cases of Wrongful Incarceration. Under review at several law reviews, submitted April 2017 (Frank R. Baumgartner, Amanda Grigg, Rachelle Ramirez, and J. Sawyer Lucy).

Punctuations and Trends in Budgetary Change, Submitted, Policy Studies Journal, April 2017 (Ehud Segal and Frank R. Baumgartner)

A Power Law of Death: Event Dependence in U.S. Executions. Submitted, March 2017, Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. (Frank R. Baumgartner, Janet M. Box-Steffensmeier, and Benjamin W. Campbell)
